INTERESTS

- Eating fish and chips in the car at night in the rain
- Room temperature
- Pushing buttons with really smooth push button action
- Psycho analyzing Michael Jackson
- Imagining my hair is replaced with my cats tabby hair (Its just a fantasy, I wouldn't actually work like this)
- Comparing data with completely irrelevant other data
- Collecting Qbert Atari Video games
- Getting a little bit wet in the rain then quickly running inside
- Reading The Age in public and the Herald Sun in private
- The enjoyment of being taller than my father
- Lying to my pet, telling it I will be back in one hour when really I intend to be five hours
- Discreetly sniffing other peoples hair on crowded trams

- Bush walking

Me shaking hands with an HR consultant from the Job Agency, Hallis, for a data entry position I had just received at Kleffmann and Associates. Notice my handshake (on the right) is calm, knowledgeable, has attention to detail, and is extremely reliable with a nice protruding cuff.

Another job offer I received. Notice how assured my new boss' hand is in passing me the reins – his hand pretty much says “I would trust you with my wife on a Ferris wheel whilst you were both eating ice creams” (my hand on the right). My new bosses protruding veins shows his heart is pumping more blood than usual – a sure physiological indication of excitement that he is employing me.

Me being “let go” by the Star Wars Dept Manager at Myer after the Star Wars Hoopla wore off. Notice the stern assuredness in my handshake (on the right) with only the slightest hint of surprise. This is my gracious, vulnerable vet professional handshake. A lot can be said in a handshake like my Daddy told me.

Much Obligings,

Darby Hudson
